NOVEMBER MEETING

At our November meeting Ellen L. Moran, owner-president of Leadership Dialogues, LLC., discussed different patterns of communication. She noted that in the internal/external communication spectrum, people that exhibit internal patterns may have difficulty accepting feedback from others and are motivated from within. On the opposite side of the scale, people with external patterns seek direction, approval, and motivation from others. She emphasized that most people have a combination of internal and external patterns. In order to have effective interaction with others, it is important to gauge what internal and external patterns they display and tailor communication accordingly.

INDUSTRIES TO AVOID IF YOU HOPE TO STAY EMPLOYED OVER THE NEXT DECADE

By Steve Giegerich

St. Louis Post-Dispatch

In a heads up to those wishing to remain gainfully employed between now and 2020 (on the outside chance that predictions of the earth's demise on Dec. 21, 2012 are ill-founded), the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics has compiled a list of ten industries expected to shed the most jobs over the next decade.

They are:

- 10) Telecommunications carriers
- 9) Service stations
- 8) Activities that support mining
- 7) Newspaper publishing
- 6) Apparel manufacturing
- 5) Printing
- 4) The Postal Service
- 3) Auto parts manufacturing
- 2) Production of semi-conductors and other electronics
- 1) Department stores
